A Scene on the Ocean.

The Northern (England) Whig complains The Aurthor of the shipment of some insane pau-bitterly of the shipment of some insane pau-bitterly of the shipment of some insane pauger, who unwittingly took passage on the same ship. The letter says:

"As they entered the ship, their ghastly tisages, staring eyes, and unmeaning looks, nnmistated. There were about sixteen of them.—
it will naturally be asked if some Yankee assium has disgorged its unhappy inmates. This, I understand, was literally the fact. These poor creatures, who, perhaps, long since emigrated to the blessed country of the stars and stripes, and had spent the vigor and strength of their days in enriching the bloated Republic, have been at length sent home, to remain a tax upon this country, or an into remain burden on their unhappy relatres, although they contracted their malady of American soil. The passengers suffered much uneasiness and annoyance during the whole voyage, as these maniacs had no person to look after them, but were allowed to range through the ship, both day and night, range through the berths of passengers, sel suppose, in quest of food, and screaming and yelling in a most bideous manner. Occurse, having no person to take charge of them, their persons were foul and filthy, and their actions disgusting in the extreme. l: is a crying shame that these mad-men and mad-women were suffered to wander onguarded among the other passengers. If the United States is to return its lunatics to this country, it should charter a vessel specially for that purpose, and not mix them upprotected among same people. It was a woful sight to see these miserable wretches, conveyed from the ship in a cart up the streets of Liverpool. My history of them ends here. During the passage acts too odious even to contemplate were committed among themselves and some of the seamen. Surely some inquiry ought to be made into the strange aff ar; for I can positively say a more horrible and more disgraceful occurreace has seldom happened. The captain denied all knowledge of their being lunatics."

Thrilling Scene in Chins.

A correspondent of the New York Journal bitterly of the Saturn to Liverpool. This compers from position of the letter from a passen-plaint is founded on the letter from a passen-ter from the passe ted the anchorage of the several Squadrons at that place. He was writing in his state room, when a blow struck the ship like that tisages, stated that the intellect was of a solid mass of lead extending the whole dy to topple over. At the same instant loud roises of command were heard on the deck. mingling with the creaking of the rigging, the rush of men, and the lowering of boats. Leaving my room, and rushing to the gangway to ascertain the cause, I was met at the foot of the gangway with a deluge of rain, and still worse, with a tempest of bail stones of such size and force as I had never known. One, striking me in the eye, not only for a time blinded it but created exquisite pain; while another and larger, striking me upon the bosom, seemed almost to break the skin, through a thick vest, shirt, and flannel. At length reaching the deck, what a scene met the eye! A violent gale had sprung up without forewarning, under which the ship reeled and the waves rose to a fearful height, threatening to leave the bottom of the Gulf bare .--Indeed, such was the force of the wind, as it drove the water into the sea, that though we were anchored ten miles from the shore and in six fathoms of water, it was soon found that the Powhatan was aground without movfrom its anchorage! Sand was also blown plentifully from the shore to the ship. The boat of the Minnesota remaining by the side of the Powhatan, and the eix men in ber, the the gale struck the boat and instantly swamped ber, the men being tumbled into the sea and threatened with being instantly swallowed up by the waves. Our Commodore, Captain and Lieutenants, with all the inferior officers, were instantly on deck and at their posts under the pitiless storm, giving orders to lower the boats, and if possible to rescue the unfortunate men; while the crew, all observing the profoundest silence, but showing the deepest anxiety in their countenances, strained every nerve to lower the boats, and then seizing their oars, plied them manfully. Four boats were soon manned, each containing ten men, whose chances seemed little better than those of the

> the whole fleet around us bowing to the storm, though hardly able to keep my place. How fast the bodies of the poor fellows receeded from us, borne away by the violence of the waves! Two, indeed, unable to swim. instantly sank beneath our ship, but were soon washed away. The rest could be seen at times mounted on the top of the waves, and then sinking, and for a long time disuppearing from sight. The boats in pursuit took different directions, according as the overcasts were driven, and themselves at times disappeared; for so deep were the troughs of the sea, that these boats, 25 or 30 feet long, often seemed to stand perpendicular, resting on one side of a wave. Some of them proceeded so far for the rescue of those they saw battling for life, that when they had rescued them, they would have been unable to return but for the abatement of the gale. One poor fellow I watched long and with painful interest, as he was nearer and more fully in view. Nothing could be seen but his head, which sometimes rose above the waves, to which he seemed to cling as to a plank, and often as he sunk. he re-appeared seemingly resolved to live .--A feather in the air might as well battle with the hurricane; and yet be held out, till to my own relief as well as his the hoat reached him and took him in. Two full hours had passed before the rescued were on board again. Some of them had been carried three miles from the ship. The gale, the rain, the bail, the mountain waves, and sublime and painful scene, such as I had never witnessed before, and hope not to witness again. As I stood upon the deck, and contemplated it, I remembered the lines of the out without doing any damage. poet Lucan in his Pharsalia, where he says it s pleasant to look abroad upon the sea in a storm and see a ship struggling with wind and wave, and then to think that to are not there. The sentiment is an atrocious libel on human nature. It may be true when applied to stoics and apicureans, like the poet, but has no support in the experience of the mass of mankind, certainly not in a bosom having one epark of humanity.

At this time I succeeded in reaching a po-

Alexandria Market, Oct. 12. We have no change to note in our quotation for Flour or Grain. The market is quiet, and the transactions to a limited extent.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 12 - Flour is heavy; Howard street and Ohio $5.371@$5.50. Wheat is dull for common qualities, but prime is in de mand; red 114@122c; white 125@142c Corn is drooping; white 79@Suc; yellow 85@S9c.-Whiskey is steady.

NEW YORK, Oct. 1 .- Flour has declined State $4 45@$4.55; Ohio $4.90@$5.10; South ern $5@$5.50. Wheat is nominally 2c lower, closing with a declining tendency. Corn is lower; mixed 69@72c. Pork is heavy; prime $14@$14.25. Lard is steady at 104@11c .-Whiskey is dull at 22c At the tea sale to day prices slightly advanced. Stocks are active but irregular. Va. 6's 94; Mo. 6's 873. Sterling Exchange firm.

GEORGETOWN GRAIN MARKET - Since our last eport the market for wheat has been better, and prices of white bave advanced 3 cents pobushel; this is owing to the light receipts. We note sales at $1 35 to $1 38 for fair to good white, no prime offering. Nothing doing with red. Several cargoes of wheat have arrived from Baltimore consigned to millers White corn sometimes in good demand, and sales have been made as high as 85c. The market for yellow is dull, and we quote at the same price.

THE ENGLISH GRAIN MARKET .- A Liverpool grain merchant, writing to a leading commercial house in this country, says, "much stress is laid by friends on your side on the small export trade your shippers are doing, but we have so many ways in which we are supplied with grain and flour as to make us almost independent of the United States, and we are sorry that some of our friends should imagine that high prices ruling with you should produce a corresponding advance here, such not being the case.

post and rail fence. The soil is one of the very best, having a fine dark chocolate surface, easy to cultivate, with rich, deep, dark, clay loamy subsoit, admirably adapted to all Gardening purposes, (with eastern and southern slopes for early vegetables.) as well as all kinds of grains and grasses, a Grapery, or Nursery, &c., &c. Upon this FARM, there are three never failing SPRINGS, all of which stood the test of 1854-one of them by pipes under ground, at a trifling expense, can be asily conveyed into the celiar of the dwelling ouse, for family and dairy purposes, after which, conducted to the stable, cow-shed, &c. There is likewise a small stream of water running through the upper part of the FARM, at the base of the southern slope, affording ample means for all purposes of a Hot-House, Celry Beds, (for which last purpose the valley through which this stream passes is admirably adapted) as well as for all other Gardening purposes. For a river farm, it has been unusually healthy, the subscriber having had upon it for two years, a family of from six to seven persons, and luring that time never had occasion to call in a physician .- The location of this farm, along side of, and adjoining to the city of Alexandria, its soil and productions—the last named is evidenced the present growing crop of corn upon itne new, substantial, and permanent bridge, just erected over Hunting Creek, affording at all imes a safe and certain road to and from Maret-the new Tornpike and Mount Vernon roads forming its eastern boundary, render this tarm well worth the attention of all persons in want of either a market, or a dairy farm, or
